MISSION OF THE PRESS.

t is Playing a Mighty Part in the Dress Mr. John E. Harrett of the Screnton (I'a.) Truth, at a recent banquet, in responding to the contiment, "The Frees," said: Is there any thing now that can be said of the press? It spenks for itself every morning and every afternoon. It is the tongue of medern thought. Without the press civilization would be dumb. It is the gift of speech in the mouth of progress, and like many another greatgift it is sometimes misused. But we must not forget its morits in contemplating its shortcomings. There are spots on the sun; but who is are spots on the sin; but who is willing to live is oternal durk-ness on that account? The sword is often used by the despot, but that is no reason why it should not be un-sheathed for the enered cause of liberty. Water is terrible in the torrent, but Water la terribie in the torrent, but must we, therefore, reject it when "li droppeth as a gentle rain from Heaven" to gladden the mendow, and give an added touch of green to the landscape? The preas is a mighty weapon which can be put to good or ovil uses, and, notwithstanding its critics, and they are many, since every man knows how to run a now supper better than the od tor. I am here to assert that its wonderitor, I am here to assert that its wonder-ful benefits to mankind as lar exceed it-shortcomings as the noonday giory of the sun outshines the spots on the disc the sun outshines the spots on the disc of that great luminary. Rightly conducted it is a sword and a shield that cirkos at wrong in high planes, and defends the weak against the encroachinents of the strong. Its best work is done when it cajoys the largest freedom. Whenever a despot uit has old world contemplates some dark deed he muzzlee the press. The average despot would he happy if there were nonempapers. It is the duty of the press to print facts, but facts don't aiways mit some persons, and they invariably exclaim: "Don't say any thing about it!" When the mighty Car has a poor, weak womar flogged to death in Siberla he says to the newspapers of Russia: "Don't MAN'S INCONSISTENCY.
